Cegedim announces its ambition in the telemedicine market with Docavenue

First remote consultation office to open June 30

Boulogne-Billancourt, France, June 29, 2018

Cegedim plans to develop in the telemedicine market via Docavenue, its online appointment scheduling platform. The Group is teaming up with a start-up, Healphi, to open a remote consultation office and will soon launch a new telemedicine solution.

The first Healphi remote consultation office will be housed on the Multidisciplinary Health Clinic in La Selle-sur-le-Bied in the Loiret department. The grand opening is scheduled for 2:00 pm on June 30, with the first patient visits scheduled for Tuesday, July 3. The opening is the culmination of months of groundwork done in partnership with Healphi, which initiated the project and first proposed the idea for the eponymous remote consultation office.

In areas where primary care physicians are scarce, Healphi remote consultation offices will allow doctors to treat patients just as they would in a traditional medical practice. The offices will draw on Cegedim's technological and regulatory expertise, as well as its MLM (monLogicielMedical.com) and Docavenue solutions.

Patients will schedule appointments online using the Docavenue platform. They can also call or make an appointment directly with a nurse. When their appointment time arrives, patients will go to the remote consultation office, where a nurse will be waiting for them and will set up the videoconference with the remote physician.

Scaling up nationally

In addition, Docavenue plans to roll out its remote consultation platform nationally in the weeks ahead.

The solution will be aimed at the numerous doctors in private practice who want to offer their patients this consultation option, which new regulations will allow them to do starting on September 15, 2018. Remote consultations will also be an appealing option for patients who have disabilities or live in medical deserts.
